THANKSGIVING FOODS TO KEEP AWAY FROM PETS!

The holidays are a time for gratitude, family, and great food – but some of our favorite dishes can be dangerous for pets. Before those tempting leftovers make their way to the floor, here are a few foods to avoid sharing:

- Turkey bones and skin: Fatty and hard to digest; bones can splinter and cause internal injury.
- Stuffing and gravy: Often contain onions, garlic, or excess salt – all harmful to pets.
- Chocolate and desserts: Especially dangerous for dogs; even small amounts can cause illness.
- Grapes, raisins, and currants: Can lead to sudden kidney failure.
- Xylitol (found in sugar-free items): Extremely toxic to pets, even in tiny doses.
- Alcohol or raw dough: Both can cause serious, sometimes life-threatening reactions

If you'd like your pet to join the feast safely, offer a little plain turkey breast, green beans, or sweet potato instead.

From all of us at Indian Trail Animal Hospital, we wish you and your furry family members a happy (and healthy!)

Thanksgiving season.

ONYX'S STORY

“After losing his brother and best friend, Onyx started struggling with anxiety and loneliness that led to constant licking and scratching. Dr. Z helped treat his skin infection, and just when things were looking up, his eye flared up. Thankfully, Dr. Tabony and the amazing team at Indian Trail Animal Hospital got us in right away, ran tests, and started treatment.

Now Onyx is back to his happy self – no more scratching and his eye looks great!

The whole ITAH team has cared for us since day one. They’re compassionate, patient, and always go above and beyond for my pets. I’m so thankful for everything they do!”
